What is design?

How it might apply to life

Problem finding and solving

A simple way to understand what design is to an everyday person is that it's a repeatable process that empowers us to find the right problems to solve and develop the best solutions to those problems.

The diagram shown is a variation of the design thinking methodology that was developed by Stanford university in the 70s. All programs and work as human centred designers use a similar framework as a tool to make good things happen (creating valuable solutions).

Welcome!

Frankly Human is (com)passionate by design.

We are a design consultancy and coaching practice created by Jacinta McMahon to bring kindness and creativity to make good things happen.

"Designing solutions should be a joy."

Flow from problem identification, articulate a shared vision co-create solutions, products or services using design thinking, lean research, design sprints, and agility.

Jacinta brings ease and fun to the process of creating with human-centred design. Her mission is to make design accessible and empower people to do great things with their knowledge, experience, and skills.

You bring the problem, opportunity or audacious goal. Together, we create solutions that knock socks off.

3 steps in this workbook

This Why Workbook guides you through three stages in the design process with the intention of supporting you to prioritise your core personal values and draft a purpose statement for you to use.

The three stages covered:

Understand

01

- reflect and gain awareness
- what's your story?

Focus

02

- describe the areas you want to focus on
- what are your unique priorities?

Brainstorm

03

- generate ideas & actions
- be inspired by people to spark ideas
- Gather feedback from people and life to find the right fit

Understand

Reflecting on your current experiences

Reflection

What gets you out of bed?

Take some quiet time to consider your responses to the following questions. They will help you connect with your personal values for our next exercise.

1 What motivates me to get up in the morning?

2 What keeps me up at night?

3 What am I doing when I'm at my best?

4 Why am I bothered by what bothers me?

5 Why do I do the work I do?

6 Why do I live where I live?

Reflection

What gets you out of bed?

7 Why do I buy what I buy?

8 Why do I read and watch what I do?

9 Why do I long for what I long for?

10 Why do I admire whom I admire?

11 When am I happy?

12 Why do I have the relationships that I have?

Reflection

What gets you out of bed?

13

What impact do you want to have?

Take some time to read back over your responses to this prompt

- Write down in a list the words that kept coming up in your reflection
- Note any intense emotions that you felt as you were writing this response.

Card sort

What are your values?

- ① Begin to group your preferred word cards in ways that make sense to you.
- ② Perhaps one of the words reflects the meaning of many, so you could ditch the others and stick with the one more meaningful word.
- ③ You might write a new word that fits better for you.
- ④ You're aiming for a shortlist of 10!

Here's an example

Card sort

What are your values?

- ① Ditch the cards that don't feel like your values.
- ② Taking the remaining cards, begin to group them in ways that make sense to you.
- ③ Perhaps one of the words reflects the meaning of many, so you could ditch the others and stick with the one more meaningful word.
- ④ You might write a new word that fits better for you.
- ⑤ You're aiming for a shortlist of 10!

What are your values?

Arrange your values in order of importance based on how they make you feel.

A pyramid-shaped card sort template consisting of 10 empty rectangular boxes arranged in four rows. The top row has 1 box, the second row has 2 boxes, the third row has 3 boxes, and the bottom row has 4 boxes.

Crafting Why Statement

Connect your core values and opportunities

Think about your values and opportunities to craft a statement which speaks to your purpose (i.e. what you feel you should be doing day to day)

This is an ongoing process. It takes time to get one that fits perfectly and you can tweak this over time as priorities and interests change for you.

Here's an example

To.. authentically share my gifts

So that... others may realise their gifts can make a difference

To...

So that...

Applying my Why at 'Work'

Apply your statement to a work context

How could you make more opportunities to love what you do?

..be sure to think about HOW you could actually make these happen.

More of this...

Less of this...

Reflection

Moments of truth

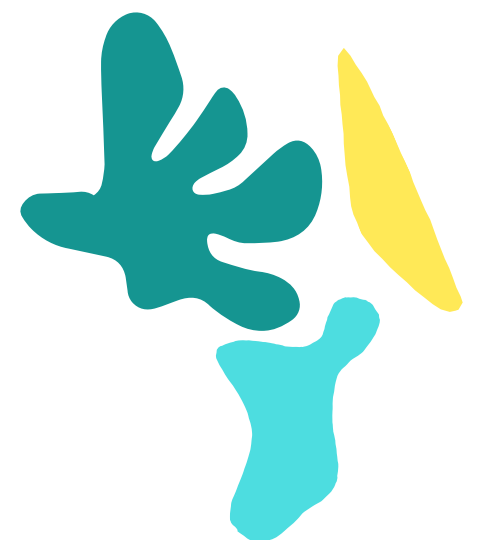

Feeling out of sorts?

Trying to decide if a new opportunity fits?

Consider these questions:

- ① What core value does this fit with?
- ② What level of excitement do I have about this?
- ③ Will/does this distract from something else that is very important to me?
- ④ How might this play out in the future?
